

Lecture Series on Liberty and Coercion in Public Health

During the fall, 2008, the Institute will sponsor a lecture series on Liberty and Coercion in Public Health.

- Each lecture will be given on a Tuesday, 5:00-6:30, in Cabell 138.
- This series is open to the public
- Speakers will provide exact titles of their presentations later—for now we will only list their broad topics, to be further specified later.

- 09/02 James F. Childress (University of Virginia) on John Stuart Mill's legacy for public health
- 09/09 Lainie Ross (University of Chicago) on newborn screening
- 09/16 James Colgrove (Mailman School of Public Health, Columbia University) on vaccination
- 09/23 Griffin Trotter (St. Louis University) on coercion in mass casualty situations
- 10/07 Amy Fairchild (Mailman School of Public Health, Columbia University) on surveillance
- 10/21 Mark Rothstein (University of Louisville) on quarantine/isolation
- 11/04 Ruth Faden (Berman Institute for Bioethics, Johns Hopkins Bloomberg School of Public Health) on coercion in the context of social justice

11/11 Ronald Bayer (Mailman School of Public Health, Columbia University) on liberty and community

11/18 Ezekiel Emanuel (Department of Bioethics, National Institutes of Health) on access to health care

Questions?

Please get in contact with Jim Childress (jfc7c@virginia.edu or 924-6568)